French Artist

Born in 1972, lives and works in Lyon

Traces

Ameline Vanot is a contemporary French artist whose work explores the boundaries between the visible and the invisible. From a very early age, she developed an awareness of what escapes the eye.

For her, creating becomes a disposition toward wonder, toward listening, toward that silent curiosity that seeks not to grasp but to feel. Her training at the Beaux-Arts in Saint-Étienne first grounded her in material and space. She shapes, arranges, and balances.

From furniture to interior architecture, she approaches forms with an eye for invisible tensions, rhythms, and those almost imperceptible vibrations that give a space its sense of harmony. But very quickly, material alone is no longer enough: it calls to be transcended. Naturally, painting becomes her new territory of exploration.

Between Nyons and Lyon, in this back-and-forth between rootedness and inspiration, her work turns toward a more inward quest. In contrast to any visual saturation, she carves out spaces of silence, transparency, and lightness, where the gaze can finally rest.

Her works never seek to convince: they suggest, they whisper. Something appears there, suspended, almost elusive as if her work were capturing a fleeting moment of transition between the visible and the invisible.

Through a refined artistic language, Ameline Vanot creates atmospheres where time slows down. The eye stops trying to understand; it begins to feel.

And in this suspension, something within us becomes accessible: a forgotten, invisible, yet deeply alive part of ourselves. Silence is not emptiness but breath.
