French artist

Born in 1970, lives and works in the Paris region.

The Echo of the Gaze.

In China, the creation of works in which painting and poetry intertwine dates back to Su Shi (1037–1101) and other scholars of the Northern Song Dynasty, who regarded painting as “silent poetry” and poetry as “formless painting.” Emperor Huizong (1082–1135) of the Northern Song Dynasty enthusiastically encouraged the inscription of poems on paintings, thereby inspiring court painters to realize the ideal of a perfect fusion between poetry and painting.

In Anne’s work, the subtle, almost monochromatic color serves as a prism that focuses our attention on the resonance of the motif, thereby transporting us to a spiritual dimension—the sensory experience of a lived moment. In the spirit of Thierry Davila’s “Walking—Creating”—“walking becomes the preferred way to listen to the world, to pay attention to it, because moving is also a way of learning to hear.”

Anne walks, walks for a long time—and the echo of her gaze captivates us, reassuring us like a familiar presence. So we must face the facts: we must not be misled by the apparent simplicity of Anne Commet’s delicate paintings, but rather have the willingness to look beyond color and motif, to penetrate the organic vibration of the painting, and then contemplate, in a meditative way, the immensity of the feelings that connect us to life. The resonant echo of Anne’s gaze draws us entirely into the poetic ebb and flow of our temporal experience of the world. A silent trace of our sense of wonder. Finally, silence.

“If poetry is a painting that speaks, my painting is silent poetry.”
