Francois-Xavier POULAILLON

French Artist

Born in 1973, lives and works in the Pyrénées-Orientales.

Through his work, François-Xavier Poulaillon connects with the mountains and the mineral realm to bring forth their sacred dimension as if through a liberation. The stones he selects during his wanderings shape him just as he shapes them, guiding him toward the light. All of this meticulous sculptural work is a solitary journey through the material and its structural nuances. It is a collaboration with living forces—the stones and the mountains. Sculpture is, at its core, the culmination of a process that originates deep within our earth.

“When I was a child, I wanted to be a stonemason. I collected stones and hammers. I had a dream in which I was dragged to the bottom of the water by a rock chained to my foot. I wanted to break the surface to breathe, but the rock held me back. I could see the light, but I remained trapped.

My sculptures express a search for grace, for deliverance. They are promises of salvation. “A living work of art is not an object but a thing, and the artist’s role is not to bring a preconceived idea to fruition but to follow the forces and flows of matter that bring the work into existence.”

“Making—Anthropology, Archaeology, Art, and Architecture”
