Michel DUPORT

French Artist

Born in 1943, lives and works in Paris.

Through the configurations of his volumes or the dispersion of his forms, the artist has, for more than forty years, approached the construction of the painting as a reflection on the painter's "territory." Titled "Formant Tableau" or "Tableau/Volume," the artist's works facilitate a dialogue between paintings, forms, volumes, and colors that unfold on the wall.

The title may refer to the famous collection of detective novels known as the "Série Noire." So why revisit an expression from the 1970s and 1980s in paintings and volumes? Why the color black, when it was excluded from the usual palette? There are no answers to these questions, but bearing witness to the "crime" is a story that constantly repeats itself—that of the returns that ultimately shape the evolution of new works.

The two canvases presented in this exhibition attest to the timelessness of Michel Duport's works; created in the early 2000s, the artist reworked and finalized them in 2022. These forms on canvas can be likened to three-dimensional objects on the wall, painted in the same manner, for, as the artist states, "the forms in the paintings are defined in the same way as three-dimensional forms."

Michel Duport's works are in constant dialogue with one another and contribute to their coexistence. Each form complements or supports the others, each existing thanks to the presence of the other. In fact, it is sometimes the volumes that support the rectangular forms of the paintings. The colors, for their part, overlap and exert a constant influence on one another. The artist works with great mastery of his color palettes, both in their creation from pigments and in their application.

Whether on canvas, plaster, or bronze, the artist's works vary not only in medium but also in the different ways material and color are applied. The multiplicity of textures, the eloquence of the nuances, and the agility of the forms endow Michel Duport's works with the freshness of an eternal questioning, referencing the history of modern art and a sensitivity to "painting."
