Daniel LEVY

French artist.

Born in 1971, lives and works between Nîmes and Paris.

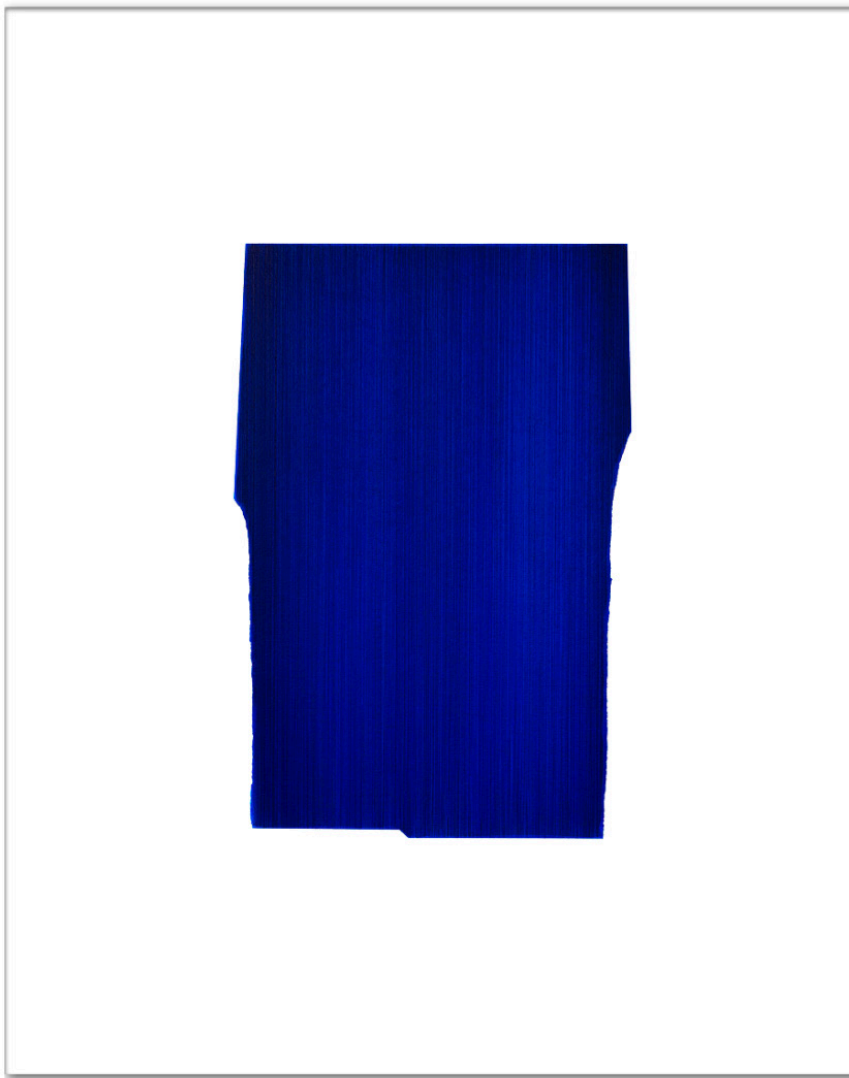

Daniel Levy's work is situated within a space constructed by emptiness an emptiness organized by the artist, whose initial gesture is always to set aside the white space around the areas he will mark. The artist's exploration engages with the notions of presence and absence and their reciprocal resonances. The "Masses-Séquences" are large-format compositions that develop slowly and raise questions about color and form in relation to space. They evoke in the viewer a contemplative state conducive to meditation.

The result of a long and meticulous creative process, each drawing requires hundreds of layers of color and thousands of felt-tip pen strokes. The colors are carefully applied, juxtaposed, and then layered. This repetitive process demands intense concentration, a particular state of mind and body, detachment from the world, and immersion within the work. The artist explores the life of color. With each pass, he may or may not alter the shade of his marker; this gradual transformation through layering and readjustments is one of the keys to the work, which engages time and memory through gesture and perception. The gestural quality brings the background to the surface through transparencies. Meaning emerges from the depth of the pictorial space and the qualities it takes on through the trance-like nature of the gestures. The painter sometimes discovers on the surface hues that were applied thirty layers below. Even more mysteriously, a golden color appears on the surface from the combination of two markers—red and pink. The work becomes a place of a bygone era, of a strange alchemy, a magical space of sensitivity and knowledge.
